Gentlemen,

I've just completed my annual round of meetings in Washington, D.C., and I'm pleased to report that no surprises came up. Our relationships within the administration are strong, backing for our mission remains enthusiastic, and I foresee no major obstacles to hamper the full achievement of our mutual goals.

That said, we've spent several years now taking the long view and conducting planning. But the time for theory is over. We at the IHC are fully ready to move forward with concrete action if we plan to succeed.

To that end, I'd like for you to take some of our personnel on your own staff. This transfer of skill and knowledge will make engineering and production more efficient for you, and will allow us to concentrate on administration and research rather than gearing up for a construction project we are not well-equipped to manage.

We can discuss this further at our meeting next week, but meanwhile, you should look into hiring Drs. Satnam Tsurutani and Adrian Helmsley. I'll do what I can to incentivize them when you're ready to make an offer.

Sincerely,

Barbara Lewis-Penn
